SCHOLARLY PRODUCTS: DUKE GLOBAL EDUCATION INITIATIVES

current Rashida Ferrand, HIV physician and clinical epidemiologist, LSHTM, Wellcome Trust fellow, and Biomedical and Research Training Institute, Zimbabwe.

I analyzed data from Ferrand's qualitative study of the impact of interactive film and community discussion on HIV-related behavior and stigma in suburban Harare. Yujung Choi, a  Duke MSc-GH 2017 student, participated in the qualitative analysis and spent 2 weeks in August 2016 with Ferrand to assess possibilities for a summer 2017 fieldsite for two MSc-GH students. MSc-GH research projects will be located in Harare clinics and focus on HIV/AIDS testing and counseling for adolescents. Crissi Rainer, MSc-GH 2018 and Andrea Koris, MSc-GH 2020 conducted MSc-GH thesis fieldwork.

2016 Lauren Franz, Duke University, Petrus de Vries, Division of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, University of Cape Town, and Jessy Guler () Duke MSc-GH 2016 student)

Building on video-taped focus group discussions from summer 2015 fieldwork conducted by Duke MSc-GH student, Jessy Guler, we developed a two-hour training module for best qualitative health research practices while conducting FGD with care-givers of autistic children in Cape Town, South Africa. Of special focus is focus group methodology in a multi-lingual, multi-racial urban setting. We jointly taught this module in Spring 2017 with my GLHLTH 772 Qualitative Methods course at Duke with de Vries' UCT students.

2017 Deborah Jenson (Romance Languages), Margaret Humphreys (History), and Neil Prose (Dermatology), Duke University.

In collaboration with a multi-disciplinary team of Duke faculty, and with funding for three years from the Dean of Humanities and the Franklin Humanities Institute, I explored the idea of a Global Health Humanities in the Duke classroom. The concept was to bring two faculty together – one humanities and one global health – to teach the same course content for one week and to join their two classes together through one evening event with an external speaker. I curated four events and documented three events in short videos.

2016 Elton Kisanga, Rose Mwangi, and Beatrice Light Temba, Research Ethics Review Committee faculty and staff, Kilimanjaro Christian Medical University College, Moshi, Tanzania.

In collaboration with faculty, staff, and students of the Kilimanjaro Christian Medical University College, I developed a series of five 5-minute research ethics training videos, available here. The scripts for these video scenarios are based on culturally relevant issues in research, identified during focus group discussions and interviews. Issues raised include community distrust of externally-funded research projects, power dynamics of collaborative research between US and Tanzania colleagues, and the broader social impact of research at the community level. Duke MSc-GH and undergraduate students collaborated directly with KCMUCo medical students. Training videos used in both my GLHLTH 740 and GLHLTH 341 courses and in KCMUCo research ethics workshops.

SCHOLARLY PRODUCTS: DUKE GLOBAL EDUCATION INITIATIVES

2014- Charmaine Royal (PI), Paula Tanabe, Nirmish Shah, and Michael Babyak, Duke University;
2017 Ambroise Wonkam, University of Capetown, South Africa; and Monika Asnani, University of West Indies, Jamaica. Bass Connections Global Health research project, Integrative Global Health Research on Sickle Cell Disease.

An interdisciplinary and global team collaboration to develop an ecological model of the impact of social, environmental, economic, genetic, and phenotypic variables on the individual experience of sickle cell-related pain. My contribution was to develop the qualitative component of the research: train ten students in qualitative research methods and analysis, co-teach GLHLTH 395 for two semesters, develop interview guides, supervise student fieldwork in four sites (Durham, Cameroon, South Africa, Jamaica), conduct analysis. To date, this project has produced two Masters student theses, and there are several undergraduate honors theses in process.

2014 Qualitative Research Methods for Reform of Elder Care Policy in China

One-day 8-hour workshop, "Introduction to Qualitative Research Methods for Developing Aging Policy in China." I developed and delivered to a six-person delegation from the Development Research Center of the State Council for China. A collaboration with Shenglan Tang.

2013- Deborah Gallagher (PI) and Rebecca Vidra, Duke University. Bass Connections Global Health
2014 research project, Strengthening Community Environmental Health through Duke-HBCU Partnerships,

This project deployed a social justice framework to contribute to the developing relationship between a Historically Black College in Dallas and the local community, with a special focus on environmental justice and healthy food security. I was invited to join the team because of my qualitative research skills, especially my expertise with Photovoice, a community-based participatory research method that places the community perspective at the center of the research project. My contribution was to train seven students in qualitative research methods and analysis, especially Photovoice and focus group methodologies.

2012; Duke - Peking University Two-Week Summer Certificate in Global Health, Beijing, China
2013

In collaboration with Yali Cong and Yan Guo, Peking University, I developed and taught four 3-hour sessions, Global Health Ethics: Case studies from China and Africa (Introduction to Global Health Ethical Frameworks, Resource allocation for HIV/AIDS prevention, Quarantine (SARS vs. Ebola), and Research ethics for vulnerable populations). 40 students per year, MA and PhD students, as well as China-CDC junior officers.

2017 2nd Annual Duke Global Health Film Festival

Co-PIs: Stewart, K., Rogas-Sotelo, M. and B. Fernandez. Health Visions: Reproductive Health Equity in the Americas, focused on recent documentary film (Zika) and reproductive and human rights in Latin America. Over eight days we screened 9 films, representing 7 countries. Of special interest was the campus visit of filmmakers Debora Diniz (Brazil), Mauricio Andrada (Mexico), Daniela Abad (Colombia), and Esteban Ramirez (Costa Rica) who attended and introduced their documentaries. For the first time the Duke Global Health Film Festival featured a student competition for short films (less than 10 minutes) addressing an issue of importance in global health.

2016 * ** 1st Annual Duke Global Health Film Festival

I developed the original concept for an annual Global Health Film Festival. The inaugural festival was held over six days in February 2016. The theme was recent documentary films on infectious disease in Africa (Ebola, HIV/AIDS, TB). In close collaboration with Duke undergraduate Jamal Edwards (Trinity '16), and over 12 other students, we curated a week of eight events: (1) six film screenings with the Director or Producer in attendance for five films and a US premier for one film (2) two student "lunch-n-learn" workshops with film producers (3) one academic panel. I coordinated the film festival with a week of content on the ethics of global health photographic images and documentary film for my GLHLTH 740 course. Attendance at each event ranged from 20 – 150 people. We reprised the Duke academic panel as an invited panel at 59th annual meeting of the African Studies Association, Washington, DC, 1-3 December, 2016.

2015-2018 Global Health Humanities Faculty Workshops

In collaboration with Deborah Jenson, Director, Franklin Humanities Institute, and with funding for three years from the Franklin Humanities Institute Mellon Non-Departmental Working Group in Historical, Global and Emerging Humanities, we are exploring the methods and theories of a Global Health Humanities through faculty workshops. The concept is to bring a diverse group of humanities and global health faculty together to find common ground in defining the emerging field of global health humanities. To date, we held three events:

- S15 Medical Humanities, Global Health Humanities: Reflections on Identities, Practices and Potentials. Holly Tucker, French and Biomedical Ethics, Vanderbilt.
- F15 Global Health Humanities: A View From Africa. Randall Packard, History, Johns Hopkins and Alvan Ikoku, Comparative Literature and School of Medicine, Stanford.
- S18 Future Trends in Health Humanities Publishing and Pedagogy. Craig Klugman, DePaul University; Erin Lamb, Hiram College; Olivia Banner, UT-Dallas; Esther Jones, Clark University; Robert Miller, Oxford University Press; Kearsley Stewart, Duke University.
